FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

DEFENDERS OF THE GALAXY, COULD WE HAVE YOUR ATTENTION PLEASE?

New Four-Player Tower Defense Title “Galactic Alliance” Changing Game of Cooperative Play on iPad

SEATTLE and DETROIT — Galaxy defenders come together to defend against a surging alien horde in Galactic Alliance. The latest game title from Vectorform brings real-world four player collaboration to the iPad, and is the design and technology firm’s most popular release since Catan on Microsoft Surface.

Galactic Alliance is an exciting multiplayer experience because it brings intergalactic tower defense to the real world. Up to four players can collaborate locally--stockpiling and maneuvering weapons to build a strategic defense against the invading creeps. A version one release of Galactic Alliance was released in October, quickly earning a “New and Noteworthy” designation, and over 44,000 downloads in the first few days of its release. An update to the game was released on Tuesday, Nov. 30 featuring 60 new waves (levels), and a special reward for winners — a glimpse of Galactic Alliance 2, currently in development. All updates were completed by collaborating with the feedback and fan-base of the gaming community, a common practice within the Vectorform Game Studio.

Galactic Alliance debuted at the top of the download charts around the globe, and hit the number one spot in Spain. Justin Bush, a lead creative developer at Vectorform anticipates the how the latest wave of Galactic Alliance will be received. “People are going to love it. I love this game. We all love this game, especially the latest release,” he says. Galactic Alliance 2 is in development, and will be available early 2011.
